OVERWHELMING FACTS.

The Inconceivable Problem of the Exist. The volume occupied by this stupenwithin it all possible visible material, must be but a speck when compared with the space which contains it. Think of the water in the Atlantic ocean, and think of the water in a single drop. As the drop is to the Atlantic ocean, so is the sphere which we have been tryto conceive in the es extent of space. As far as we know it would seem that there could be quite as many of such spheres in space a there are drops of water in the Atlantle ocean. And, in all probability, these other spheres throughout space ere tenanted by stars, systems and galaxies just as grand in themselves, just as imposing in their collocations nd just as overwhelming in their nyriads as are those which lie withh that one particular sphere of which alone we know anything with certainty. Provided with this description, we see at once that the doctrine of a visible central sun is an absurdity. whether there may be some central sun oppowhere or other I can express no onlylon, save that I do not see any on whatever to think that such a body Come all rational grounds of probability, that even if there were a central sun in the universe it would not lie within our ken.
